Abstract

A technique for determining an objective quality index for the result of a clustering operation is disclosed. This technique can be used to evaluate the result of different clustering algorithms or can itself be the basis for an iterative clustering algorithm. The invention can be implemented by means of a computer program running on a data processing system which can have parallel processing units for performing different clustering algorithms in parallel.